DEVELOPMENT & PLANNING

It's truly said that 'Planning is to visualise what nobody can realise'. Planning is a continuous process. In developing countries like India, development and real estate has tremendous growth potential - the key here being the population, which is a driving force for the pace of development in any part of country. Development and real estate go hand-in-hand. Planning is a process or a method by which this growth is controlled and channelised. It plays a significant role in the overall development of any urban centre. Planning is a foundation need for sustainable development.

URBANISATION & GROWTH OF AHMEDABAD

Ahmedabad has witnessed rapid urbanisation in the last decade. Urbanisation is a positive phenomenon and a pre-condition for improving access to services, and economic and social opportunities. The projected population of Ahmedabad by the end of 2011 will be 65 lacs plus. Our own Ahmedabad is already the biggest city of Gujarat and the seventh largest city of India. With the vision and focus of the current government, as also individual initiatives by realtors, the city is all set to grow and expand its wings.

The city has already made its presence felt across the globe by growth in each sector, be it manufacturing, the service industry or other allied sectors. Ahmedabad - the mega city - is all set to equal the metros. Looking at the pace of current development and the future prospects considering the demographic and economic context, tomorrow's Ahmedabad will be today's Mumbai in the coming fifteen years. The scale of the city would change completely and so would the challenges and issues.
